Douglas A. James, early AIDS patient

Associated Press

Douglas A. James, one of the first people in the Philadelphia area diagnosed with the AIDS virus, has died after a 10-year battle. He was 36.

James, who died Tuesday at Betak Hospice in Mount Airy, was diagnosed in 1982 shortly after the disease was discovered. He remained active until February 1991, when illness forced him to retire.

Born in Long Island, James attended nursing school in Philadelphia in the early 1970s. In 1982, he switched careers to study dance at Temple University. With a friend, he staged "Giving Voice," a multidisciplinary performance piece at the Walnut Street Theater in 1985.

After graduating from Temple in 1986, James earned a master of creative arts from Hahnemann University. He was most recently employed at Jewish Employment Vocational Services, where he was a drug and alcohol counselor.

He lectured frequently at universities and before church groups on the impact of living with AIDS.

Survivors include his parents, John and Betty Lou James; two brothers, four sisters, and his longtime friend, Jack Wallace.

A viewing was held Saturday at St.
Peter's Episcopal Church. Burial was to be on Long Island.
